COPY AS THE POST:

Five pages. One week of posting for a fashion designer business. Steal the structure, not the words.

Three posts I would test this week for a fashion designer business:

1. a fitting-room clip showing one garment on three body types
2. a fabric-care answer customers can save
3. a made-to-order timeline with honest milestones

The mistake to avoid: posting only finished dresses.

First action: Show the fitting decision, not just the final dress.

Why this works: a page that only shows finished work gives a new customer nothing to save and nothing to ask about. Process is what earns the message.

This is a planning example, not a claim that Easywurld manages this account.

The five pages are attached as a document. Page one is the cover LinkedIn shows on mobile.

COPY AS THE POST:

I keep a rule for this studio: nothing goes out that a person has not checked.

What I am testing in the studio this week: draft a reply to a new enquiry.

→ Input: an anonymised enquiry
→ The draft: a reply with one clarifying question
→ I check: price, availability, promise and tone
→ Only then: an approved reply

The part I will not automate is the check. A machine can write a reply. It should not be allowed to promise a price, a date or a result on my behalf.

That boundary is the product. Everything else is convenience.

Labelled concept work — a sample build, not a client result.

Where would you keep a human in the loop in your own business?

Absolute advice is expensive. Take this one: "Posting every day guarantees growth."

Verdict: It depends.

Frequency can create more chances to learn, but it does not fix an unclear offer or weak content. Ten useful series posts are different from ten random posts.

How we would test it:
Compare one week of consistent series posts with the previous week using saves, profile visits and relevant enquiries

Keep the useful part. Drop the absolute.

That is the whole method: one claim, one verdict, one test small enough to run this week.

The businesses that survive this year are not the loudest.

Nine out of ten businesses answer “how much?” with a number.

The ones that survive answer with a decision: what is included, what is not, and what happens next.

A price is not a defence. It is a boundary.

I am not saying this to sound clever. I have watched good businesses lose a sale in one chat because the reply was a bare number with no next step.

If you sell by WhatsApp or DM, that reply is your shop counter.

Save it for the next time somebody asks "how much?".

Two things worth changing this week:

No thread. No funnel. Just the next step made obvious.

Evening thought. The price reply is not the end of the conversation.

The price reply is not the end of the conversation.

This is why The Chat-to-Customer Playbook exists as a ■5,000 DIY pack: most owners do not need an agency this month. They need the scripts, the tracker and the routine, and they need it before Friday.

I am deliberate about the boundary. It is not custom work. It does not guarantee sales. It helps you convert more of the enquiries you already get.

Saying the limit out loud has cost me nothing and saved a lot of awkward conversations.

What does your price reply say after the number?
