The principle is old. The example is ours. Claude Hopkins: specifics beat generalities.

Three posts I would test this week for a makeup artist business:

1. a skin-prep question answered without medical claims
2. a booking timeline for weddings
3. a product list with shade ranges

The mistake to avoid: posting only flawless faces.

First action: Explain the booking timeline.

Why this works: a page that only shows finished work gives a new customer nothing to save and nothing to ask about. Process is what earns the message.

This is a planning example, not a claim that Easywurld manages this account.

The five pages are attached as a document. Page one is the cover LinkedIn shows on mobile.

Three hours on aI Build: Turn meeting notes into actions today. Here is what I got wrong first.

What I am testing in the studio this week: turn meeting notes into actions.

→ Input: an anonymised note
→ The draft: owners, deadlines and open questions
→ I check: invented commitments
→ Only then: a confirmed action list

The part I will not automate is the check. A machine can write a reply. It should not be allowed to promise a price, a date or a result on my behalf.

That boundary is the product. Everything else is convenience.

Labelled concept work — a sample build, not a client result.

Where would you keep a human in the loop in your own business?

Someone will tell you this week: "Paid ads will fix a weak offer." Here is the verdict.

Verdict: False.

Ads can amplify a message. If the offer, page or reply is unclear, more traffic can expose the problem faster.

How we would test it:
Fix the landing page and reply script before increasing spend Keep the useful part. Drop the absolute.

That is the whole method: one claim, one verdict, one test small enough to run this week.

I have read enough "how much?" chats to know one thing.

Busy is the most expensive way to avoid the one thing that pays.

You can answer every message and still never send the invoice.

Do the paid thing before the loud thing.

I am not saying this to sound clever. I have watched good businesses lose a sale in one chat because the reply was a bare number with no next step.

If you sell by WhatsApp or DM, that reply is your shop counter.

Save it for the next time somebody asks "how much?".
