Five pages. One week of posting for a photographer business. Steal the structure, not the words.

Three posts I would test this week for a photographer business:

1. a before-and-after of framing, not results
2. a client prep checklist
3. a location guide with permission notes

The mistake to avoid: posting only final galleries.

First action: Share one prep checklist.

Why this works: a page that only shows finished work gives a new customer nothing to save and nothing to ask about. Process is what earns the message.

This is a planning example, not a claim that Easywurld manages this account.

The five pages are attached as a document. Page one is the cover LinkedIn shows on mobile.

Today I chose the slower option. Let me explain why.

What I am testing in the studio this week: draft a review request.

→ Input: a completed service record
→ The draft: a polite request with an opt-out
→ I check: consent and incentive rules
→ Only then: a human-sent request

The part I will not automate is the check. A machine can write a reply. It should not be allowed to promise a price, a date or a result on my behalf.

That boundary is the product. Everything else is convenience.

Labelled concept work — a sample build, not a client result.

Where would you keep a human in the loop in your own business?

Absolute advice is expensive. Take this one: "Email is dead for small business."

Verdict: False.

Email can still support follow-up and repeat customers when permission and relevance are handled well. It is not a replacement for every channel.

How we would test it:
Send one useful email to a permission-based list and track replies

Keep the useful part. Drop the absolute.

That is the whole method: one claim, one verdict, one test small enough to run this week.

The businesses that survive this year are not the loudest.

SEO is not a trick. It is the habit of being findable when someone already wants you.

Answer the question people type, in the words they type it, on a page you own.

Be the answer, not the advert.

I am not saying this to sound clever. I have watched good businesses lose a sale in one chat because the reply was a bare number with no next step.

If you sell by WhatsApp or DM, that reply is your shop counter.

Save it for the next time somebody asks "how much?".

Launch is a checklist, not a button.

Two things worth changing this week:

No thread. No funnel. Just the next step made obvious.

Evening thought. The HTML starter is a simple page, not a custom site.

The HTML starter is a simple page, not a custom site.

This is why The One-Offer Landing Page Kit exists as a ■5,000 DIY pack: most owners do not need an agency this month. They need the scripts, the tracker and the routine, and they need it before Friday.

I am deliberate about the boundary. It is not custom work. It does not guarantee sales. It helps you convert more of the enquiries you already get.

Saying the limit out loud has cost me nothing and saved a lot of awkward conversations.

What does your price reply say after the number?
