John Caples said it first: curiosity needs substance. Here is what that looks like on a Nigerian small-business page.

The move: Curiosity needs substance.

A curious opening should deliver a useful answer, not clickbait.

What that looks like on a Nigerian page:

'The post got shares. The offer got silence.' Then explain the missing next step.

The part most people skip: do not steal the words. Steal the structure, then write your own example from your own customer.

Source: Tested Advertising Methods. Attributed, not quoted at length.

The five pages are attached as a document. Page one is the cover LinkedIn shows on mobile.

Today I chose the slower option. Let me explain why.

Correct name.
Correct address.
Correct hours.
Correct categories.

What I have learned building it: the work is rarely the hard part. The hard part is making the message, the website, the content and the follow-up say the same thing.

When they disagree, the customer does not argue. They just go quiet.

So I am posting the process here, including the parts that are still unfinished.
No wahala — that is the point of building in public.

What is the one thing in your business that keeps disagreeing with itself?

Verdict: False.

A trend is useful only if it fits the audience, brand and rights. Forced

How we would test it:
Use the trend filter: relevance, rights, capacity, proof

Keep the useful part. Drop the absolute.

That is the whole method: one claim, one verdict, one test small enough to run
