The principle is old. The example is ours. Joanna Wiebe: one conversion goal.

Three posts I would test this week for a auto mechanic business:

1. a diagnostic question before quoting
2. a maintenance interval from the vehicle manual
3. a repair approval process explained

The mistake to avoid: posting only engine bays.

First action: Show the diagnostic question.

Why this works: a page that only shows finished work gives a new customer nothing to save and nothing to ask about. Process is what earns the message.

This is a planning example, not a claim that Easywurld manages this account.

The five pages are attached as a document. Page one is the cover LinkedIn shows on mobile.

I keep a rule for this studio: nothing goes out that a person has not checked.

What I am testing in the studio this week: summarise a report.

→ Input: a labelled sample report
→ The draft: a one-page summary with decisions needed
→ I check: numbers and invented results
→ Only then: a reviewed summary

The part I will not automate is the check. A machine can write a reply. It should not be allowed to promise a price, a date or a result on my behalf.

That boundary is the product. Everything else is convenience.

Labelled concept work — a sample build, not a client result.

Where would you keep a human in the loop in your own business?

Absolute advice is expensive. Take this one: "Testimonials are enough proof."

Verdict: It depends.

Testimonials help when they are real, specific and permitted. They do not replace clear scope, samples or transparent process.

How we would test it:
Pair one permitted testimonial with a labelled sample and scope

Keep the useful part. Drop the absolute.

That is the whole method: one claim, one verdict, one test small enough to run this week.

The businesses that survive this year are not the loudest.

The first reply wins more work than the best portfolio.

Not because speed is clever. Because attention moves on in minutes.

Answer fast. Answer plainly. Answer once.

I am not saying this to sound clever. I have watched good businesses lose a sale in one chat because the reply was a bare number with no next step.

If you sell by WhatsApp or DM, that reply is your shop counter.

Save it for the next time somebody asks "how much?".

The move: one conversion goal.

A page or post should move one audience toward one meaningful action.

My own version, written for a Lagos customer:
'Message PLAYBOOK to confirm order details.' Not 'like, save, share, follow and buy.'

I am borrowing the structure from Joanna Wiebe, not the words. Credit where it is due: Copyhackers.
