Five pages. One week of posting for a bookshop business. Steal the structure, not the words.

Three posts I would test this week for a bookshop business:

1. a staff pick with a one-sentence reason
2. a reading-order guide for a series
3. a customer question answered without spoilers

The mistake to avoid: posting only covers.

First action: Record one staff pick.

Why this works: a page that only shows finished work gives a new customer nothing to save and nothing to ask about. Process is what earns the message.

This is a planning example, not a claim that Easywurld manages this account.

The five pages are attached as a document. Page one is the cover LinkedIn shows on mobile.

Three hours on aI Build: Draft alt text today. Here is what I got wrong first.

What I am testing in the studio this week: draft alt text.

→ Input: an owned image
→ The draft: a factual description of the image
→ I check: decorative vs informative context
→ Only then: a reviewed alt text

The part I will not automate is the check. A machine can write a reply. It should not be allowed to promise a price, a date or a result on my behalf.

That boundary is the product. Everything else is convenience.

Labelled concept work — a sample build, not a client result.

Where would you keep a human in the loop in your own business?

Absolute advice is expensive. Take this one: "A content calendar guarantees sales."

Verdict: False.

A calendar organises publishing. Sales still depend on offer, audience, trust and follow-up.

How we would test it:
Pair the calendar with one offer and one enquiry route

Keep the useful part. Drop the absolute.

That is the whole method: one claim, one verdict, one test small enough to run this week.

The businesses that survive this year are not the loudest.

Custom work is not better than a product. It is a different promise.

Products need boundaries. Projects need scope. Mixing the two is how both fail.

Say which one you are selling.

I am not saying this to sound clever. I have watched good businesses lose a sale in one chat because the reply was a bare number with no next step.

If you sell by WhatsApp or DM, that reply is your shop counter.

Save it for the next time somebody asks "how much?".

No thread. No funnel. Just the next step made obvious.

Evening thought. The safety checklist keeps a human in charge.

The safety checklist keeps a human in charge.

This is why The Everyday AI Prompt Desk exists as a ■5,000 DIY pack: most owners do not need an agency this month. They need the scripts, the tracker and the routine, and they need it before Friday.

I am deliberate about the boundary. It is not custom work. It does not guarantee sales. It helps you convert more of the enquiries you already get.

Saying the limit out loud has cost me nothing and saved a lot of awkward conversations.

What does your price reply say after the number?
