The principle is old. The example is ours. Ann Handley: edit for the reader.

Three posts I would test this week for a tailoring school business:

1. a student progression clip with permission
2. a course schedule with fees and duration
3. a tools list beginners actually need

The mistake to avoid: posting only graduation photos.

First action: Show one beginner tool list.

Why this works: a page that only shows finished work gives a new customer nothing to save and nothing to ask about. Process is what earns the message.

This is a planning example, not a claim that Easywurld manages this account.

The five pages are attached as a document. Page one is the cover LinkedIn shows on mobile.

Building a small studio in Lagos means the boring decisions matter most.

What I am testing in the studio this week: draft comment moderation replies.

→ Input: common public comments
→ The draft: calm replies and escalation flags
→ I check: arguments and private data
→ Only then: a human-approved reply

The part I will not automate is the check. A machine can write a reply. It should not be allowed to promise a price, a date or a result on my behalf.

That boundary is the product. Everything else is convenience.

Labelled concept work — a sample build, not a client result.

Where would you keep a human in the loop in your own business?

Someone will tell you this week: "Educational content should never sell." Here is the verdict.

Verdict: False.

Useful content can lead to a relevant next step. The problem is forcing an unrelated pitch, not selling itself.

How we would test it:
End one teaching post with a matching offer or question

Keep the useful part. Drop the absolute.

That is the whole method: one claim, one verdict, one test small enough to run this week.

I have read enough "how much?" chats to know one thing.

Consistency is not posting every day. It is being recognisable every time you do.

Same voice, same promise, same next step.

Be repetitive on purpose.

I am not saying this to sound clever. I have watched good businesses lose a sale in one chat because the reply was a bare number with no next step.

If you sell by WhatsApp or DM, that reply is your shop counter.

Save it for the next time somebody asks "how much?".
